

3

This annual festival started in 1999 and celebrates the coming of spring. It promotes Arab culture and supports the local economy. The festival begins with an opening carnival and parade and finishes in extravagant fireworks display that attracts a huge number of people. It is called 'Hala Febrayer' and is held in Kuwait.

1

This annual festival celebrates Bedouin tradition and way of life. This includes camel racing, traditional dancing and singing, a Bedouin wedding, and a horse parade. Also, poetry contest and readings, as well as traditional music and colourful dancing. It is called the 'International Festival of the Sahara' and is held in Tunisia.

2

This festival began in 2001 and celebrates cultural diversity and tolerance, openness, respect and dialogue by featuring many international and local music artists. It is one of the biggest annual music festivals in the world with over two million attendees. It is called 'Mawazine Festival' and is held in Morocco.

